LEGAL UPDATE

States Enacting Pay Equity Laws

By Olivia G. Robinson, Attorney at Kahn, Dees, Donovan & Kahn, LLP

There are two federal laws, the Equal Pay Act of 1963 and Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, that were enacted to prohibit employers from discriminating in pay and benefits based on sex. However, the statistical disparities still exist today between men and women's pay. Over the past year, California, New York, Maryland, Massachusetts, and Oregon have enacted legislation to address the gender pay disparity.

The California Fair Pay Act, effective January 1, 2016, requires employers to justify pay differentials and limits the factors employers can use to explain the differences in compensation. The permitted reasons for pay differences, taken as a whole and applied reasonably, are the following: seniority system, merit system, a system that measures earnings by quantity or quality of production, or bona fide factor other than sex, including skills, education, training, experience, shift or geography.

Like the California law, the New York Achieves Pay Equity Act, effective January 19, 2016, requires employers to justify pay differentials, limits the factors employers can use to explain differences in compensation, and places the burden on employers to prove the reasons for any pay differences. However, under the New York pay equity law, liquidated damages for willful violations will be increased to 300% of wages due.

The Maryland Equal Pay for Equal Work Act, effective October 1, 2016, prohibits pay discrimination on the "basis of sex or gender identity". The law also prohibits employers from "providing less favorable employment opportunities," which includes placing employees into "less favorable career tracks" or positions, "failing to provide information about promotions or advancement," and "limiting or depriving" employees of employment opportunities because of sex or gender identity

The Massachusetts Equal Pay Act, effective July 1, 2018, bans employers from seeking information about applicants' compensation history in the hiring process. Additionally, the law creates an affirmative defense to wage discrimination claims for an employer that has (1) completed a self-evaluation of its pay practices that is "reasonable in detail and scope in light of the size of the employer" within the three years prior to commencement of the action; and (2) made "reasonable progress" towards eliminating pay differentials uncovered by the evaluation. The Oregon Pay Equity Law, effective January 1, 2019, is substantially similar to the Massachusetts law.

Many legal commentators are predicting more states will enact pay equity laws with language similar to the ones listed above. For those states without a pay equity law, employers should consider engaging in an internal pay equity audit to keep abreast of their company's pay trends. Most pay equity laws will require an employer to complete a self-evaluation of pay practices in order to assert an affirmative defense against a wage discrimination claim.

HRCI Introduces a PHR for Entry-Level Professionals

The HR Certification Institute (HRCI) has launched a new credential for practitioners who are just beginning their HR careers: the Associate Professional in Human Resources (aPHR) certification. The aPHR is designed for professionals who are embarking on an HR career or transitioning into the HR field. The aPHR exam focuses on the fundamentals of HR principles and practices including recruitment, HR development and retention, compensation and benefits, employee relations and safety.

Individuals planning a career in HR, those serving in HR support roles or who have HR responsibilities but do not currently hold an HR position, as well as military personnel seeking HR professional development or transitioning to civilian HR roles will be particularly interested in this certification, explained HRCI CEO Amy Schabacker Dufrane. HRCI's Professional in Human Resources credential is the next step up from the aPHR.

Registration for the aPHR pilot exam opens Feb. 16 for test dates in early May and registration for the first aPHR testing period opens April 1 for test dates in November 2016 through January 2017. Individuals passing the aPHR exam during either testing window will receive the aPHR designation. Learn more at www.hrci.org/aphr.
